

COSSACKS PRAYING AT THE GRAVE OF A COMRADE.

Gen. Corbin's New Navy

JACKIES WILL HAVE UNIFORMS
OF MOST GORGEOUS CHARACTER.

Old Salt's Arms Will Be Striped
AS A Zebra's Leg.—Firemen Will
Shovel Coal wearing White Duck
Trousers.—Deck Hands Will Roll
Molasses Casks in Natty Suits
While Corbin Looks On.

New York May 2.—Major-General Henry C. Corbin, with the thought of that fine yacht-like tug the government is going to furnish for his personal use, is making preparations to array his crew in uniforms the like of which were never seen on sea or land, but often on the stage. Officers wearing smart double-breasted jackets with two rows of gold buttons down the front, white caps with rakish pattern, leather vizards and white duck trousers and white shoes, will race quarterdeck when the yacht-plover plows the waters of New York harbor. Natty jackies, wearing sailor caps, with streamers, sailor jackets with wide reverse, showing a striped yachting jersey, and with trousers that spring enough at the bottom to cover a No. 14 shoe, will assume graceful attitudes about the deck.

Gen. Corbin, brilliantly uniformed, will sit down under the awning on the afterdeck entertaining his guests while a white-coated steward serves iced drinks from a long cut-glass pitcher with grass, pineapples and cherries in it.

"How is she pointing, captain?" Gen. Corbin will sing out.

"The captain will stop pacing the quarterdeck, put up his marine glass, (not the kind the steward is handing around), salute and reply:

"Son' by sou'east, sir, about three points off Sanitary Scow No. 96.

"Get her in the wind, captain, get her in the wind, sir."

"Aye-aye, sir!" the captain will reply. Then the party on the afterdeck will sing "A Sailor's Life for Me," and the yacht-plover will tear on its way through the bay.

Of course all this will happen if the war department agrees to pay the cost and Gen. Corbin has put the matter before the department in such a clear light that the officials cannot have the heart to refuse, especially after they look over the uniforms now on display at the quartermaster's department in Washington.

It is understood at Washington that Secretary Loeb is one of the admirers of Gen. Corbin's plan to uniform the deckhands on the ancient ferry-boats and tugs that are doing army service in the harbor of New York. The secretary failed in his plan to uniform the White House attendants.

Ever since Gen. Corbin came to New York to take command of the department of the Atlantic, with headquarters at Governor's Island, he has been very busy arranging things according to his notion of how they should be. He learned all about these things when he was a guest of the German emperor.

The first thing Gen. Corbin did was to establish a salon at his quarters. All of the officers in the department were invited to come all dressed up, and Governor's Island never saw such a brilliant sight. When the general came to make his visits to the city, and found that an ancient ferry boat, patronized by washerwomen, grocers' boys and laborers, he went straight to the front and talk about the terrible state of affairs. He told the department officials right to their faces that he wanted a different kind of a tug—a tug with a cabin in it, so that if he should be caught out as far as Liberty Statue some dark night he could rest his head on a two-inch coil of rope. He was told that he could purchase such a tug if he could find one, but on second thought the secretary of war believed it was better to wait until the summer or vacation season sets in.

But Gen. Corbin's eyes used to the glitter of gold lace and the shimmer of brass buttons, could not bear to look at the deckhands working on the Gen. Meigs and the Hancock, some of them in their shirtsleeves and without neckties. He wrote a letter to the secretary of war and told him that it was the duty of the department to make the poor deckhands happy by buying sailor suits for them and taking it out of their pay. The secretary of war replied that he thought so too, and asked Gen. Corbin what sort of a uniform he would suggest. Gen. Corbin has had contractors busy for several days making up sample uniforms, and now the uniforms have come to Washington to be approved. The men on the boats smiled last night when they learned that they were going to shovel coal and handle hog-heads of molasses with nice sailor caps and white duck trousers on.

The officers' summer uniform is to be just like that of naval officers on the stage. The cap is ornamented with a silver eagle on a blue wheel, with stars all around the wheel and a sword and key crossed finishes the design. This cap will be worn by the mate, the chief engineer, the assistant engineer and the steward. The captain will wear a cap of the same kind, only he will have gold anchors and a gold strap about an inch wide across the brim at the top. This latter pattern was borrowed from a cap that Gen. Miles designed for himself and adopted and wore.

Then the deckhand is to wear the sailor's cap, with streamers of wide gros-grained ribbon and the wider the ribbon and longer the streamers the better the cap. They must be long enough to flap in the breeze when the jackies stand on the port bow with his arms folded and looks out to Brooklyn. There are to be service stripes of wide gold lace to go on the arms of all the men in uniform. Some of the old salt's arms will be striped like a zebra's leg.

OPPOSED TO INSTRUCTIONS.

F. P. Trott States Why Delegates Should Go Unpledged.

Frank P. Trott, of Phoenix, formerly secretary of the Democratic Territorial Committee, was visiting Tucson this week in attendance on the convention of Odd Fellows. Mr. Trott is very much opposed to an instructed delegation from Arizona to the Democratic National Convention. "It would be follow for us," said Mr. Trott, "to send a delegation gagged and bound and branded to the national convention. It would deprive us of any influence we might otherwise be able to exert. The six votes of Arizona might be able to exert considerable good in the interest of the territory, either in voting on the platform or for the nomination of a candidate, if handled wisely. But to send Arizona's representatives with any individual's brand on them would be extremely foolish."

"We need substantial and influential Democratic help to prevent the republican conspiracy to merge Arizona with New Mexico, and we ought to be in a position at the national convention to appeal for that help successfully and intelligently. It is now well understood that our only hope of defeating the joint statehood bill rests with the democrats of the senate."

"I understand that every democrat in the senate is opposed to Mr. Hearst's nomination for president. Would it be wise for Arizona, under this condition, to fly in the face of the best judgment of its friends by sending a delegation instructed for Mr. Hearst? To my mind, taking in the present grave crisis confronting Arizona, it would be the extreme of bad judgment to send an instructed delegation to the national convention."
